WACO, Texas — Several renovation projects are under way at the Waco Veterans Affairs Medical Center, resulting in the shuffling of staff and programs.

The Waco Tribune-Herald reported Saturday that the work includes Building 1, the main building on the campus facing the Avenue of Flags, which will be converted to a medical tower with various clinics.

The project is funded through $7.9 million in federal stimulus funds the hospital received last year.

The building has already received new energy-efficient windows, electrical system upgrades and a new heating, ventilation and air conditioning system.

Construction workers have completely gutted the building's basement and moved on to stripping the upper floors.
